Although the personal name of the maimed king varies he is frequently referred to as “The Fisher King” or in some later texts, “The Rich Fisher”. Occasionally the Fisher King is the son or grandson of the maimed king. So why is he the Fisher king? In the Cretien De Troyes version, he is certainly fishing when he meets up with Perceval. This Fisher King has been wounded with a spear through the thighs. He can no longer ride but he can still enjoy fishing!

In 1275, the Fisher King and the hermit followed the Lady of the Lake to Lac Célay in Toussaint. He most likely transported common, but worthy folks on the island to the Lady’s islet, and collected herbs. He was not a very talkative guy, and managed to communicate mostly with a series of Mhm’s and Uhm’s, except for when motivated to talk.
